THE DRIGGS PATENT PIANO-FORTES are all of the full scale of? octaves. The most experienced workness, the greatest perfection of mechanical skill, and the best seasoned materia's are employed in their manufacture. They are constructed on a solid fron frame or bed plate, entirely separate from the case, thus relieving the case, sound-boards and all the wood-work from the strain of the strings, making them much more solid and enduring. There are two sounding boards, arranged as those of a violin, giving three times the amount of vibrating surface found in any other plane-forte; which being free from the strain of the strings, becomes more sonorous and pure on their vibrations as the planes becomes older. Their construction is the most simple and scientific, and they are the most enduring and full-tuned pianos ever made. Call and see them, at WM. HALL & SON'S New Store,

INDIANA.-The State Board of Equalization of in diana, having concluded its labors, reports that the whole number of acres in the State is 22,125,124; value THE REASON OF RELIGION.

To GERRIT SMITH-My Dear Sir : Your mas, han eight columns in THE TRIBUSE of July 23 against "Orthodoxy," and in favor of what you reques "the Religion of Reason," call for an equal epass is review. But I am not able to pay for so much as that, and can only throw out a few hints, and cross-examine your "Reason" by a few questions.

Theology bave, of course, parted company with Rea. son, and need to be convinced that they should have a reasonable religion. This is cool. It may be ees. reasonable religion. This is cool. It may be eenreasonable religion. The library of the libreasonable religion to the the theology you have thus characterized and propounced "insane."
has abjured Reason? Has it presented no "reasona of the faith" it cherishes !—reasons that remain usasswered, and which, for the most part, no man has attempted to answer? What if it shall appear, on proper inquiry, that no other Theology has so improghably intreucced itself in the deep foundations of Nature and Reason? Let me cite you to but one among hundreds of volumes—Butler's Analogy. And let me suggest that the man who, in the same spirit, with the seme calm, clear, candid, dignified, philosophica, reasoning, could confute the arguments of that book
for revealed religion and its distinguishing doctrines, could do more toward overturning "orthedery" as

OF REASON AND NATURE.

You demand a religion of Reason. But what is Reason? What is its proper province? What are the conditions of its successful exercise?

You define Reason to be "the process of rationation, according to Webster, is "the act or process of deducing consequences from premises."

Is Reason, as thus defined, the only faculty of Human Nature? Would you ignore Consecuence, the moral sense, which claims power to revise, and, at times, to reverse the decisions of mere "Ratiocination," the faculty of Human Nature that is sooner developed than "ratiocination," bidding the infant to look up confidingly into the face of its mother, and then to actempt walking without the bidding and without the power of "ratiocination?" What if faculties like these should be compelled to see a God's face, and the hear a God's veice in the revelations of his Word, anying, "This is the way, walk ye in it?" Must the man throttle the promptings of these two godlike faculties, merely because his "Ratiocination" in the use of only "such becks as the aun and stars and earth"—the mere outward, and visible, and tangible—may have seen and heard nothing? Are the revelations of the eye, or of the ear, to be set aside because they come not through the sense of touch? Do you feel competent to tell your Maker that it is only by one faculty, or through only one channel that he shall communicate with you? Is such your "Religion of Reason." (i. e., your own "Ratiocination and its results,") inadmuch that, as you say, "no voice, not even that of the great God, has a right to be heard in the sanctuary of "the soul, except through the intinence of such values" on that reason?"

You demand a "Religion of Nature." But what is human nature! Has it but the one only faculties—"ratiocination, leaves it discipling own will also many see fit to hold communion with his creatures.

Executors. the nighest tone of ethics, the purest and moet uncompromising morality?

Do we then make void Reason through Faith? God forbid! Yea, we use and establish Reason. Reason teaches that all the human faculties should be daly honored, each in its place, the one not supplanted by the other. In reasoning, you say truly, we proceed "from the known to the unknown." There is no reasoning, then, without data. This defines and circumscribes reason. Reason itself teaches that reason has its limits. Are you certain that "such books as sur and stars and earth," exhaust all the data that God has in store for you? Are you certain that you have all the data that is requisite and desirable? Is your knowledge so comprehensive that not even the Divinity could furnish you anything you need, which lies beyond the range of your vision? If spirits of the unseen world, as you seem to hope, may yet add to the stock of your data for reasoning respecting your future existence, through the intervention of earthly mediums, to whose testimony your reason may allow you to give credit, who knows that the Father of Spirits may not aiready have furnished you the desirable information, and much more, through human messengers better attested, and more trustworthy. Your "reason," as suredly cannot epurn the testimony, because recorded in "a book," which you call "the precious Bible, that "most eloquent defender, next to Nature, of both divine and human rights." Nor can you object that the one case, and not in the other? In your own language "The provision from eternity, that a possible or given conjuncture shall serve to arrest one of "those laws, is, from eternity, a part of that law, and "the actual conjuncture does not change the law." How do you know that "miracles" and "plenary inspiration" any more than "prayer" are violations of general laws, as thus defined?

And are there no moral conditions to the sufficiency of reason? You have admitted that there are. You ask.—"But is reason sufficient for all these things?" And your answer "It is. Not, Do we then make void Reason through Faith? God My31-lawfinTa HENRY A. MOTT Lections.

the connection before quoted, "Vam, in a word, is the "earthly existence of man, unless he be born again."

Whatever might be said, therefore, of the sufficiency of reason, for a race of men upon whom "the Divine influence was unceasing," who were "disposed to put their powers to a heavenly use," and who, therefore, needed not to "be born again," it is manifest, by your own showing, that your "Religion of Reason," is not able "to seek and to save the lost"—the matter-of-fact men whom you find in this world. Your "reason," therefore, should lead you, as reason led Socrates, to acknowledge the fact, and to rejoice that the additional revelation has now come, which reason led Socrates to anticipate.

But theologians of your school are not the only persons who have abused reason by tasking it to do what it is unable to do. The school men of the middle ages made the same mistake of driving "ratiocination" with whip and spur, without data, to make bricks without straw, supposing that with it they could unlock all the mysteries of nature, in their clasets, without looking outside, for the needed facts. So the child thinks his own reason a sufficient guide, without the superior reason of his parents. The greatest reasoner on earth would act an unreasonable part, who should trust his own reason to guide him through a thick forest, in a strange country, on a dark night, in preference to the revelations of the first peasant he should meet. Far more unreasonable than either is the profoundest philosopher who thinks his own reason a sufficient guide in religion, without the Infinite Reason of the Great Father, or who supposes himself competent to select and determine the one only channel through which the y.
